Executive Review

by Darla Templeton

My friend calls the stories in this executive review co-winkie-dinks. Some people call them coincidences. I say, "There are no coincidences."

Managing Pregnancy While Living With Epilepsy

Nancy Hammond, MD

As a follow up to our July 2016 issue, we asked a member of our Professional Advisory Board to weigh in.

Many women living with epilepsy desire to have families. The good news is most women with epilepsy have normal pregnancies and healthy children. Women with epilepsy may need to have more frequent testing and doctor visits but for the most part their pregnancies will be very much like those in women without epilepsy.
